man named McIntyr, of the geological survey, is a fairy tale, and that no such man McIntyr is connected with the survey. Mr. Weed's own statement regarding the wonerful valley is quite as interesting as the anciful sketch and is strictly accurate. Death Gulch, he says is situated in the eastern portion of the park, in an extremetry rugged mountainous region; a country seldom visited save by occasional travelras to the mining camp of Cooke, or hunting parties en route to the weird scenery of he "Hoodoo" country. The mountains are from 10,000 to 11,000 feet high, and the streams flow through narrow valleys and canyons, with precipitous wails 2,000 to 3,000 feet high, that often show great anumbers of upright fossil tree-trunks, standing where they once flourished on the danks of some ancient mountain before they were covered by the ashes and stones of volcanic eruptions. The Lamar river is the largest stream draining this region, and it is on a considerable branch of this that our American upas valley was found. As usual in this the home of the wapiti or elik, a well-marked trail leads up the creek, affording easy travelling on horseback, through open meadows and thick groves

The explanation is now simple enough. The hot springs which once flowed from the springs which once flowed fro affording easy travelling on horseback, through open meadows and thick groves of pine. About two miles up Cache creek the trail leads into a little grade in the milds of thick pine timbers.

We were curious enough to taste this water and found it slightly acid, high-ly charged with gas and tasting like our soda ly charged with gas and tasting like our soda water. But it is the surface of the little basins and pools, filled by the overflow of this spring, that interests us most, for the surface of the water is covered with an evervarying irridescence whose brilliant tints put to shame the hues of the peacock's tail and surpass the changing fires of an opai. This feast of color, with its kaleidoscopic changes, fascinated us, and many minutes were spent watching it, before ascending to the summit of a little platform overlooking this spring. The slope is formed of a gray rock, whose rifled surface at once suggests the terraces of travertine, the coralled "formation" of the summath to the summit of a little platform overlooking this spring. But it is neither this deposit nor the bank of sulphur a few yards further up the creek that distinguished this place from all others in the park, though the sulphur contains cedar logs embedded in it that are ready for lighting, the wood being so impregnated with sulphur that a splint of it will burn like a match, while the black water oozing from under the bank would make a reality "jet black" ink. It is an innocent-looking little guich that runs down the slope at right angles to the creek, that makes the place worthy of this notice. This little ravine, scarce fifty feet deep, has steeply sloping sides of chalky white decomposed rock, as soft and loose as sand or clay. A little water runs down the narrow bed of the guich coild and sour, puckering the mouth with the peculiar astringency of alum. Turning aside to explore this place, we ascended the ravine, finding it rather difficult walking in the little stream bed, and hard work getting up several draps where the stream forms miniature fails of five or six feet. Above one of these liny cataracts we first noticed a white, or rather creamy, seductive-looking substance in the stream bed. This was so like genuine country cream that it was hard to believe it a purely mineral substance, but such it is, and formed about the minute oozing springs, which issue from the bottom and sides of the guich. It was here too that we first noticed a sulphurous odor and a slight oppression of the lungs—the irritating effect of the fumes of a sulphur match accompanied by a choking as if from lack of air. We paused a monent to rest, and found ourselves strangely fatigued for so short a climb; but several guasts of the fresh northwest wind filled our lungs with new vigor, and we continued our clamber up the guich. Instantly relieved, and laughing at our fears, we slid down the slope and landed beside a huge specimen of the most formidable of all the wild animals of the Rockies—a silver tip grizzly—whose long claws and sharp teeth gave evidence of having done good service. As fat as butter, and possessing a thick coat of fur that would have sold for a small fortune in a New York furrier's, he seemed ready for his long winter nap. Rolling him over, we could find no bullet-holes, no mark of violence; the only sign of injury being a few drops of blood beneath his glistening black nose. That he had been dead but a short time was certain, for there were no flies, and the carcass was fresh and natural-looking.

How had he met his death? was the question we asked each other, and at first it seemed an enigma. But, stranger still, beside him lay the decaying remains o yet another bear, also a grizzly, and above this, a few yards up the gulch, the fur and bones of other bears, five skeletons being counted besides the ribs and shoulder blades of an elk. While looking at the strange sight, reminding one of the death-chamber of the Chinese or the burial place of the Parsees, we find ourselves faint and dizzy, and suddenly realize our own danger. Climbing quickly up the slope until the fresh breeze restores our strength, the mystery is solved. It is carbonic acid gas that had filled our lungs, and had it overcome. Walter H.
